The 2026 municipal election could see the most progressive and pro-labour City Council in a generation. With Olivia Chow as Mayor, the City started for the first time in decades to invest in building affordable housing and making transit more affordable. The City extended library hours, created nutrition programs for children, protected tenants from renovictions and started to bring back direct services that had been outsourced under Ford and Tory. Voters in Toronto have an opportunity to bring in new voices to City Hall who are determined to make life better for working people. The Labour Council goes through an extensive interview process, leading to recommendations that are debated and voted on by Labour Council Delegates.
